

SHOP

The Saltbright Table

You step into a broad, clean room open to the sea, where turquoise shutters frame a view of bright water and fishing boats. A pot of spiced fish stew simmers over the hearth, and the smell of citrus, smoke, and salt follows the clatter of bowls. Behind the counter, a tall woman in patched pale clothes checks a secure knot on a coil of net before looking up and smiling.

Proprietor

Sennari serves guests as if they might be neighbours, setting down tea or a small plate of the day's catch before asking what they need. A Kalashtar fisherman and kensei, she speaks softly and keeps her boundaries clear: no threats against staff or guests, and no business that puts someone in danger for the sake of a quiet room. She wants a small, reliable boat of her own and enough mornings to fish; she values fair dealing and has no patience for anyone who charges fishers to use their own landing beach. When anxious, she checks knots that are already secure. Opening line: "Come in out of the salt wind. There's stew on, and you can tell me what you're after once you've had a taste."

Stock

Item	Price	Notes
Fish Stew	3 sp	one bowl with bread, today's catch and citrus broth
Roasted Shellfish Platter	8 sp	one platter for two, shells gathered from the morning tide
Salted Fish	5 cp	one day's ration, smoked over citrus wood
Fishing Tackle	1 gp	one complete set, mended twice and ready to use
Net	1 gp	one 10-foot-square net, patched with turquoise cord
Cook's Utensils	1 gp	one set, handle blackened from years at the hearth
Waterskin	2 sp	one full waterskin, stitched from pale blue leather
Estuary Tide Chart	5 sp	one oilcloth chart, marked with a boatwright's unfamiliar symbols

Services

Service	Cost
Bed in the shared room with a simple breakfast	5 sp per night; breakfast at dawn
Private room with a sea view and fish supper	2 gp per night; room ready immediately
Pack a hot meal for travel	5 sp per meal; ready in 10 minutes
Arrange a local fishing boat and guide	1 gp per day; available the next morning, weather permitting

Rumours

When the party orders fish or asks Sennari about the landing beach, roll once; she shares what she has heard while setting out the food.

d10
1–2	A fish seller says the old net-mender beaten by the beach gang has returned to work, but still flinches when boots scrape behind him.
3–4	A dockhand claims the gang has started demanding coin from boats that never land their catch there.
5–6	A cook says Sennari once followed a line into the shallows and hauled up a boat anchor no one could identify.
7–8	A fisher insists the sea has been whispering names through every taut line this week; Sennari listens without confirming it.
9	A stablehand says a boatwright vanished in a storm years ago, leaving an unbreakable rod in Sennari's keeping.
10	A visitor claims the inn's fish stew cures fever overnight; the claim is false, though it is filling and well made.

Secrets

DM ONLY

Sennari's fishing rod belonged to a boatwright who vanished in a storm. When its line goes taut, it sometimes whispers unfamiliar words that Sennari cannot explain. She has kept this from everyone, including her closest neighbours, because she fears mistaking its guidance for her own judgment. She is saving for a boat, and would accept help finding the boatwright or learning what happened, but will not trade the rod or endanger someone to satisfy its whispers.